

András Pető (1893-1967) initially trained in medicine and practised as a doctor in Austria. In 1938 he returned to Hungary and after the war he became a professor at the Special Education Institute and leader of the motor therapy department of the college. From his work here Conductive Education gradually evolved.

This list is not as extensive as might be expected because little is known about Pető, personally or academically. Very little published material has been traced so far, but further discoveries may be made in the future. In the 1920s and 1930s he published under a variety of pseudonyms, some of which are included below.

ς Items marked with an asterisk are English translations bound with the Hungarian or German original. All others are in English, Hungarian or German as the title suggests.
